Gone are the days when social media was just for fun and gossip. Believe it or not, beyond the fun, you can make money as an influencer.

Today, influencer marketing has become the go-to strategy for most companies and brands as they target the billions of people scrolling through social media daily. According to Statista, the global influencer marketing value peaked at $21.1 billion in 2023, making it a profitable industry for influencers.

But how can you tap into this industry and make money as a social media influencer? This article details everything you need to know about influencer marketing, including how much you can earn and the strategies you can use to make money as a social media influencer.

What Makes Someone a Social Media Influencer?

Anyone can be a social media influencer. You only need to do what you love, showcase it on your social media page, and build a community that loves what you do.

For example, if you love reading books, you can start sharing your reading experiences and book reviews on your social media pages. With time, other book lovers will find you and become part of your community.

Keep in mind that social media platforms differ in how they deliver content to your audience. So, create content that resonates with your audience in the different spaces.

For instance, video content does well on Instagram and TikTok, while text content works better on X.

Once you've figured out your niche, chosen a suitable social media platform for you and your content, and built a community, it's time to make some money.

5 Strategies to Make Money as a Social Media Influencer

Whether you have a thousand or a million followers, you can make money in different ways.

1. Work with Brands through Sponsored Content

Posting sponsored content is the easiest way to make money as a Social media influencer. This is because businesses and brands are hunting for content creators whose content resonates with their business and has an engaging audience following them.

It doesn't matter how many followers you have because you may find a brand looking for you. For example, if you are a nano influencer with 1,000 – 10,000 followers, a local brand may want to work with you to promote their products within your reach.

Depending on the product the brand is selling, you may post a picture or a video while using the product or write a review on your page. The payment for sponsored content varies depending on many factors, like the type of content, your number of followers, and the conversion rate for your post.

A single post on Instagram can earn you $10 as a nano influencer. If you're a mega influencer, such as a celebrity, you can pocket as high as $10,000.

2. Try Affiliate Marketing

As an influencer, you have a loyal community that believes in you and can buy anything you recommend to them. So, you can find brands with an affiliate program that pay you a commission for any product bought through your link.

The most common affiliate site for influencers is the Amazon Affiliate Program. It allows you to find great products on Amazon and recommend them to your audience. You can easily monitor how many products you sell and the commissions you get from them.

Besides the Amazon Affiliate Program, many brands have an elaborate affiliate and reward system for influencers to utilize. It's up to you to find products your audience might like, review them, and promote your link so they can use it to buy.

With affiliate marketing, you can easily make up to $5,000 a month as passive income.

3. Sell Educational Content

Have you already established yourself as an expert in your niche? You can start offering special courses for those willing to pay for them.

For example, if your photography skills are so good that you 'wow' everyone with your photos, why not create a photography course that shares your camera tricks with your audience? The perk to this strategy is that the course is not free.

You get to teach people how to capture great photos while earning a passive income from their access fee.

If you think you have no skill to sell to your audience, you'd be surprised at how much they are willing to pay to know how to do the things you do.

4. Collaborating with Brands as Their Ambassador

A brand ambassador is different from an influencer who posts sponsored content only. In this case, an ambassador identifies with the brand and promotes it positively.

So, if a brand approaches you to become their brand ambassador, you are tasked with creating posts about the brand and promoting their products. In return, you get rewards such as financial compensation, free products, and commissions on the products you sell.

If you feel like you are a good fit for a brand, you can contact them for any available slots in their brand ambassador program. Ensure that your values as an influencer align with their values and that you have an engaging audience that would be their target market.

5. Monetize Your Content Using Available Monetization Tools

Social media sites like Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, and YouTube have monetization tools influencers can use to make money. For instance, Facebook allows you to earn from ads in videos and reels, receive gifts from your audience in terms of stars, and earn from member subscriptions.

However, Facebook requires you to meet certain eligibility requirements to qualify for monetization. One of those requirements is to have at least 5,000 followers.

So, if you are starting as an influencer, you need to grow your audience first to receive other benefits. Once you are eligible for monetization, your videos can earn you $10 - $19 per 1,000 views, depending on how your audience interacts with the ads.
